

Project Summary

Location of Project: Community College in Hawaii

Purpose of the Project: To develop leadership skills among the vocational training faculty and staff, primarily found in the Employment Training Center in our UH-Community College System.

To help attendees understand their own and other's achieving skills.

Number and description of participants: Since becoming Achieving Styles Certified Practitioners in January, 2007, we have conducted one training session at a community college on Oahu. Our audience was made up primarily of vocational education faculty from the Employment Training Center (ETC) of our campus. They had also invited five of their student mentors to attend. There was also one Department Chair/faculty from the Liberal Arts campus who attended, for a total of 15 attendees.

General Comments: The group seemed to grasp the connection between Connective Leadership and Achieving Styles. The highlight of the session was the use of movie clips and newscasts to illustrate each achieving style. Of course, attendees were very interested in the interpretation of their own results. Overall, the group was a good one and appreciated the information. In our next session, we would like to analyze and discuss additional case studies. We plan on administering the ASI and teaching students and faculty about connective leadership in six more campuses this year.
